Foreword

GB/T 48090-2026 is a recommended national standard (GB/T) of the People's Republic of China, issued on 28 August 2026 by the State Administration for Market Regulation and the Standardization Administration of China, with effect from 1 March 2027.

It is under the responsibility of the China National Light Industry Council.

Classification: ICS 97.140; CCS Y81.

1 Scope

Children's study furniture is used daily for years, and this document sets national requirements for the study desk and chair intended for use in the home. As the title shows, it concerns domestic furniture for children rather than school or office products, so it speaks to the people who design, make, sell and test such items.

Furniture manufacturers can use it when developing product lines, retailers and importers when selecting suppliers, and test laboratories when evaluating samples. Parents are not the formal audience, but the document helps set a shared baseline that product claims can be measured against. The standard is a recommended national standard, meaning it is voluntary unless referenced in a contract or by other rules. It was issued on 28 August 2026 and takes effect on 1 March 2027. It is an original Chinese document and does not adopt an international standard. Posture and fit matter for growing children, which is one reason a common reference for this product type is useful to makers and buyers alike.
